

GREEKS TURN ON FOREMAN

FRANK M'GEE STOPS ATTACK WITH REVOLVER.

Foreign Workmen, When Dismissed,
Grab Picks and Cause Sensation
in Front of the Postoffice.

What promised to develop into a well-defined riot broke out on Sixth street, in front of the Postoffice annex, early yesterday morning, when Frank McGee, foreman of the street improvement gang now operating at that point, dismissed half a dozen Greek laborers from service.

Declaring that there was prejudice against them, a large number of the Greek workmen joined the men who had been discharged in a discussion of the incident, and violence must have been decided on, for several of the Greeks, seizing picks, rushed at McGee.

The foreman, who has but one arm, ran at first before the maddened foreigners, but was being outstripped when he turned, whipped out a revolver and kept them off by threatening to kill the first man that approached him. They hovered about for a time and then withdrew, going for advice to an Americanized member of their race. They were told not to attempt violence again, but to resort to the law in event of being unjustly treated.

One of the Greeks, Rade Dynovic, went later to the police station and complained of McGee's conduct in threatening them with a revolver. He was referred to Deputy City Attorney Tomlinson, who issued a warrant for McGee's arrest on a charge of exhibiting a deadly weapon.

On being arrested McGee said he had been threatened on Monday by the Greeks, who had taken a dislike to him. For that reason he had provided himself with the revolver, fearing an attack which he could not ward off in his crippled condition. He put up $100 bail for appearance in court today.
