

SHERIFF NABS THREE WOBBLIES

Sheriff Matt Starwich, King County's highest ranking peace officer, is not very great in stature but mighty in power, three Finlanders and a German, laborers, learned yesterday at Auburn.

The sheriff was waiting to take the stage to Seattle when he noticed the quartet and they immediately aroused his suspicion.

Walking over to them, Starwich said:

"Who are you fellows? Where are you going?"

There was a chorus of laughs and the four men, all huskies standing nearly six feet in height, surveyed the mighty sheriff of King County. Then the largest of the quartet told the sheriff that it was none of his business and that it would be very appropriate if he "took a jump in the lake or the creek," which ever was the most convenient.

Starwich, using a little of the nerve and daring which has helped him through many a tight place, in a few minutes had the four men on the stage, under arrest and bound for Seattle. They were taken to the sheriff's office and searched. Each had an I. W. W. card. They were released, as no evidence had been found against them.
