

KILLED IN A PECULIAR MANNER.

Ole Peterson, a Norwegian laborer, was killed yesterday, at Purdy, on Henderson bay, in a peculiar manner. Eight men had lifted a heavy timber with rope and tackle to its proper position in a new bridge they are building to connect Purdy with the mainland. The falsework began to give way and the workmen were ordered to get from under. All did, excepting Peterson, who tried to hold a large timber unaided. The timber crushed him down, smashing his skull and killing him instantly. He leaves a family destitute.
