Norwegian Laborer Meets Frightful
Death in Attempting to Board
Moving Car.

In attempting to leap aboard a descending lumber elevator in the Bolcom mill at Ballard yesterday afternoon, Ed Indset, a laborer, 25 years old, was caught between the top frame of the car and the floor and killed. He made a miscalculation and before he got into the elevator he was caught at the chest and terribly crushed.

The workmen removed Indset immediately and Dr. I. A. Parry was called, but the injured man died within half an hour. The remains were removed to the undertaking establishment of Graham & Engeman. Deputy Coroner W. S. Mayfield made an investigation this morning. Indset's family is in Norway. He had been working at the mill two weeks.
